Current Duties and Responsibilities

July 2006 to Present

Adjunct Professor, Center for AIDS Prevention Studies (CAPS), Department of Medicine, University of California San Francisco

My current program of research involves developing, implementing and evaluating behavioral HIV, STI and hepatitis prevention programs for incarcerated men and their female partners. This work has been conducted over the past 14 years in collaboration with community-based agencies, and has produced 13 peer-reviewed articles, a book chapter, a video and discussion guide, and numerous presentations at national and international conferences. My current projects include a 4-year R01 from the National Institute of Nursing Research (NINR) to develop and evaluate an HIV prevention intervention for women with incarcerated male partners, and a 5-year R01 from the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH) to test a family intervention for HIV-seropositive inmates being released from prison. My team recently completed a 7-year CDC Cooperative Agreement in which we developed and tested an HIV, STI and hepatitis prevention intervention for young men leaving prison that was found to be effective in reducing risk behavior. The outcome paper from that study was published in the American Journal of Public Health and we have received a CDC REP grant to develop intervention training materials for dissemination.

My duties at CAPS also include directing the Technology and Information Exchange (TIE) Core which is responsible for 1) disseminating CAPS' scientific findings to other researchers, community service providers, policy makers, funders and the general public; 2) providing technical assistance services for program development and evaluation to researchers and community service providers; and 3) promoting community collaborative research and conducting research on the process and best practices of community collaborative research in HIV prevention. Our dissemination products include the HIV Prevention Fact Sheets, the CAPS website, a series of skills-building manuals, and a bi-annual conference. The TIE Core also provides technical assistance through CAPS Spanish Language Initiative (SLI). I am also the Director of the Collaborative HIV Prevention Research in Minority Communities Program, a NIH-funded training program with the goals of: 1) increasing the number of minority scientists receiving federal funding; and 2) increasing the amount of HIV prevention research being conducted in communities of color. Program participants from around the US are trained in grant writing skills and then mentored by CAPS faculty for three years. My duties include supervising program staff and faculty, curriculum development and teaching the summer in-residence program, and mentoring individual participants.
