Although I occupy a research position, I continue to find opportunities to teach and train students, mostly through advising on their special research projects, masters' theses or doctoral dissertations.

The AIDS Policy Research Center attracts many bright interns from UC Berkeley's Public Health School and after coming here, several of them have chosen to work with me as a primary mentor. I also have the opportunity to teach program evaluation and research skills to the clinical faculty and program planners that I work with through my federally-funded research grant projects.
